Big School Resources, Small Campus Environments

Why choose between a big school and a small school, when the College of Menominee Nation offers the best of both?

- Opportunities for scholarships, internships, national student organizations, and cultural events
- Technology and teaching approaches to help you reach your personal goals
- Highly qualified faculty who will know who you are and care what you think

With its main campus in rural Keshena and urban location in metro Green Bay, CMN is both close to home and a world apart.

Choose to study entirely at one CMN campus, or schedule courses at each. Either way, you’ll know classmates and faculty from both CMN locations thanks to multi-screen, interactive HD technology. You’ll find that teaching styles are student-friendly, with new flipped-classroom options that maximize your in-class time for discussions, problem solving and group projects.

Along with well-equipped science and multi-media labs, CMN offers real-life laboratories in forestland, fields, and local communities. Student-led research at CMN has practical applications, whether the topic is 20th Century American Indian theater, climate change impact on regional forestlands, or sustainable agriculture to address global food security.

College Profile ~ ‘DIVERSITY’

As an open-enrollment college since its inception, CMN has been educating individuals from almost all ethnic and racial groups. And as a tribal college, it enrolls and has graduated members and descendants of dozens of American Indian tribes and bands.

The rich variety of customs, traditions and ways of knowing found in CMN’s student population make learning on the campuses a reflection of the broader world. Faculty members are committed to being culturally responsive. In turn, their CMN students are prepared to be practitioners and leaders who share this approach in their future careers, whether as classroom teachers themselves, or in business, government, industry, or other settings.

Core Value ~ ‘SUSTAINABILITY’

At the College of Menominee Nation, “sustainability” means more than energy conservation and recycling. It is a theme you’ll find throughout your coursework, at the heart of community outreach activities, and in all student leadership activities.

Your educational path at CMN will give you a worldview of sustainability that encompasses the natural environment and economics of safe, reliable resources; the potentials and challenges of humans and their institutions and technology; and the land and sovereignty issues of nations and indigenous communities. It is a way of learning that respects the unique ways in which Menominee have sustained their forestlands and community and all Native people value Earth.

Whatever your career path, you’ll find CMN’s blend of Western learning and Indigenous wisdom useful preparation for leadership in a fast-changing multicultural world.
